The school's third Staff Development Day was held on January 15. The teachers took part in a workshop where they discussed ways to make online learning more fun and interesting.

"The lack of presence and liveliness is a major problem of online classes. That's why we need teachers' workshops to explore ways to enhance teaching and learning," said school principal Yuen Yuk-lan.

At the workshop, the teachers gained first-hand experience of the problems students face during Zoom lessons.

The teachers explored the idea of using tailor-made methods to add spice to their teaching. These included real-time interactive whiteboards, online collaborative writing, game-like quizzes, and better use of OneNote.

"We try our best to bring in as much fun and interactive elements as possible into our virtual classrooms," one teacher said.

We should embrace lifelong learning in this new era.
